SES BEAUX YEUX. They are not black, they are not blue; Indeed, I cannot tell their hue-I only know they pierce my heart, With many a sharp and tiny dart,

Ses beaux yeux! So full of purity and light, They scorn the wrong and grasp the right; When others weep, quenched is their ray, When others smile, they too are gay. Ses beaux yeux!

They look so mischievous and bright One moment, and the next, their light Is hid from us, by eyelids pale, All fringed with lashes dark, which veil Ses beaux yeux!

At merry jest, or pranksome word, The fount of laughter is upstirred; And then how mirthful, sweet, and clear, They beam! ah! why are they so dear,

Ses beaux yeux! On others wees they kindly look-Why is it that they cannot brook One sigh, one tear, one word from me? Adieu! you'll never, never be,
